Preparation - Traveling

How to go: You can go to Mexico by motor, rail, air, or steamer. From Chicago or St. Louis fast trains, connecting with Mexican lines, get to Mexico City within three days and nights, or less. From San Francisco or Los Angeles you can travel over a U. S. railroad all the way to the Mexican capital, down Mexico's west coast thru wild and beautiful country.

From other points, U. S. railroads make good connections with Mexican routes. Regular U. S. airlines connect with Pan-American for Mexico City. You can take steamers from New York or New Orleans to Vera Cruz, thence to Mexico City by Train. By motor, you cross the border at Laredo, Texas; and it's about 780 miles of easy grade to the capital, via the Pan-American highway.

When to go: Mexico is attractive the year around. The winter (dry period), from mid-October to mid-March, is the ideal time to go, when the weather is at its very best. The rest of the year is the rainy season. But even tho it rains each afternoon, it's only for an hour or so at a time. It's over suddenly and the sun comes out on a clean, refreshed country.

"SALUDOS" - GREETINGS!

"México, the most American of American nations opens a thrilling perspective down the corridors of time. One can read widely and yet completely miss the sense of a still living past which affects the visitor to this extraordinary country....."
